

The World Is Not What It Once Was

The ocean was once so calm and blue
With life teeming around every corner
I used to watch the dolphins play
And see the seabirds rejoice in song

I would walk along the beach so clean
Watching plovers run towards the water
And waves come crashing on the shore
With nothing but clean air filling my lungs

The years went on and people stopped looking Stopped seeing life in nature and just passed by Without a second thought the animals disappeared
And the ocean levels get higher and higher

People forget what the world should be
The dolphins stopped coming and the seabirds don't sing
The silence is deafening and no one cares to notice
The oceans are tumultuous, their inhabitants are dwindling,
And the plovers are nowhere to be found
Greenhouse gasses have trapped heat in our world,
And oceans are changing for the worse,
No longer able to provide shelter and protection for new life
Children grow up not knowing what nature should be
And no one cares about what we have destroyed
It may be too late but we must wake up because world is not what it once was